

No. 14-5356

---

---

In The Supreme Court of the United States

—◆—
CHARLES CANNON,

Petitioner,

v.

UNITED STATES,

Respondent.

—◆—
On Petition For Writ Of Certiorari
To The United States Court Of Appeals For The Fifth Circuit

—◆—
BRIEF OF AMICI CURIAE GAIL HERIOT AND PETER KIRSANOW, MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS, IN SUPPORT OF THE PETITIONER

—◆—
ALISON SCHMAUCH SOMIN
Counsel of Record
19 N. Garfield St.
Arlington, VA 22201
(202) 557-0202
alison.somin@gmail.com

GAIL L. HERIOT
4830 Hart Drive
San Diego, CA 92116

Counsel for Amici Curiae Gail Heriot & Peter Kirsanow

QUESTION PRESENTED

Does Congress have the power under Section 2 of the Thirteenth Amendment to federalize bias crimes when it does not even purport to have the purpose of effectuating the ban on slavery and involuntary servitude, and, if it did claim that purpose, its legislation is neither rationally related nor congruent and proportional to such a purpose?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTION PRESENTED.....	i
IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE...	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT .....	2
REASONS FOR GRANTING WRIT.....	7
THE THIRTEENTH AMENDMENT DOES NOT AUTHORIZE CONGRESS TO PROM- ULGATE A GENERAL PROHIBITION ON RACE-BASED BIAS CRIMES .....	7
A. The Thirteenth Amendment Was Intend- ed to Ban Slavery and Gives Congress Discretion in its Efforts to Effectuate that Ban; It Was Not Intended as a Broad Grant of Power to Remedy All Social Ills Thought to be Traceable to, or Aggravat- ed By, Slavery. Since Congress Does Not Purport to Be Motivated by a Desire to Prevent Slavery’s Return, Section 249(a)(1) Is Unconstitutional .....	7
B. Even if Congress Had Purported to Be Motivated By a Desire to Prevent Slav- ery’s Return, Section 249(a)(1) Is Neither Congruent and Proportional Nor Ration- ally Related to that Aim .....	16
C. Contrary to the Fifth Circuit’s Decision in this Case, Jones Does Not Authorize Con- gress to Promulgate Section 249(a)(1) .....	20

TABLE OF CONTENTS – Continued

	Page
D. The Authors of the Fifth Circuit and the Tenth Circuit Decisions on Section 249(a)(1) Both Conceded that Important Federalism Questions Are Raised by that Section, But They (Erroneously) Concluded that Jones Required Them to Leave those Questions to this Court.....	23
CONCLUSION.....	25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

City of Boerne v. Flores , 521 U.S. 507 (1997)....	4, 16, 20
Civil Rights Cases , 109 U.S. 3 (1883) .....	8, 10, 22
Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co. , 392 U.S. 409 (1968).....	passim
McCulloch v. Maryland , 17 U.S. 316 (1819).....	4, 8, 18
Pollock v. Williams , 322 U.S. 4 (1944) .....	14
Shelby County v. Holder , 133 S. Ct. 2612 (2013).....	5, 18, 24
South Carolina v. Katzenbach , 383 U.S. 301 (1966).....	18
United States v. Harris , 106 U.S. 329 (1883) .....	9
United States v. Hatch , 722 F.3d 1193 (10th Cir. 2013), cert. denied , 134 S. Ct. 1358 (2014)...	2, 19, 24
United States v. Lanza , 260 U.S. 377 (1922) .....	19

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

U.S. Const., Thirteenth Amendment .....	passim
U.S. Const., Fourteenth Amendment .....	12, 20
U.S. Const., Fifteenth Amendment.....	18, 23
U.S. Const., Nineteenth Amendment .....	3, 23
U.S. Const., Twenty-Fourth Amendment .....	23
U.S. Const., Twenty-Sixth Amendment.....	3, 23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

STATUTES

18 U.S.C. § 249(a)(2).....	4
Civil Rights Act of 1866, 14 Stat. 27 (1866)....	11, 13, 21
Civil Rights Act of 1870, 16 Stat. 140 (1870).....	12
Civil Rights Act of 1875, 18 Stat. 335 (1875).....	10
Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Re-Authorization Act, 120 Stat. 577 (2006) .....	18
Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871, 17 Stat. 13 (1871) .....	9
Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act, Pub. L. No. 111-84, 123 Stat. 2835, codified at 18 U.S.C. § 249(a)(1).....	passim
National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2010, Pub. L. No. 111-84, div. E, § 4709, 123 Stat. 281 (2009) .....	4
Peonage Abolition Act, 14 Stat. 546 (1867).....	14

RULES

U.S. Supreme Court Rule 37.2(a) .....	1
U.S. Supreme Court Rule 37.6.....	1

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

	Page
OTHER AUTHORITIES
Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 151, 617 (7th ed. 1857) .....	10, 12
Gerhard Casper, Jones v. Mayer : Clio, Bemused and Confused Muse, 1968 Sup. Ct. Rev. 89 (1968).....	21
Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 53, 1313, 1314, 1439-40, 1465 (1864).....	8, 11
Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 2d Sess. 214 (1865) .....	8
Harlan Greene et al., Slave Badges and the Slave-Hire System in Charleston, South Carolina 1783-1865 (2008) .....	13
Gail Heriot & Alison Somin, Sleeping Giant? Section Two of the Thirteenth Amendment, Hate Crimes Legislation, and Academia’s Favorite New Vehicle for the Expansion of Federal Power , 13 Engage 31 (Dec. 2012).....	6, 24
James B. Jacobs & Kimberly Potter, Hate Crimes: Criminal Law &amp; Identity Politics 143 (1998).....	21
Jennifer Mason McAward, The Scope of Congress’s Thirteenth Amendment Enforcement Power after City of Boerne v. Flores , 88 Wash. U.L. Rev. 77 (2010).....	7, 9, 11
Jennifer Mason McAward, Congressional Authority to Interpret the Thirteenth Amendment: A Response to Professor Tthesis , 71 Md. L. Rev. 60 (2011).....	7

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

	Page
Jennifer Mason McAward, Defining the Badges and Incidents of Slavery, 14 U. Pa. J. Const. L. 561 (2012).....	7, 11, 12, 13
Guy Raz & Sylvia Poggoli, Spate of Hate Crimes in Italy Sets Off Alarm Bells, NPR News, May 31, 2008.....	21
George Rutherglen, The Badges and Incidents of Slavery and the Power of Congress to Enforce the Thirteenth Amendment, in Alexander Tsesis, The Promises of Liberty: The History and Contemporary Relevance of the Thirteenth Amendment (2010).....	9
Benno Schmidt, Jr., Peonage in The Oxford Companion to the Supreme Court of the United States 729 (Kermit Hall, et al., eds., 2005) .....	14
Thousands Protest Hate Crimes, CNN Newsroom, Nov. 16, 2007.....	17
Veto Message from President Andrew Johnson to Congress (Mar. 27, 1866), re-printed in Lillian Foster, Andrew Johnson: His Life and Speeches (1866).....	12

IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

Amici<sup>1</sup> Gail Heriot and Peter Kirsanow, (“Amici”) are two members of the eight-member U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, a commission charged with advising the President, Congress, and the American people on civil rights issues. This brief is being filed solely in their capacity as private citizens and not as Commission representatives. Nevertheless, the brief is informed by their knowledge and experience in civil rights law and policy gained from their many years on the Commission as well as the pursuits that gave rise to their respective Commission appointments. Amici believe their knowledge can assist the Court in sorting through the Thirteenth Amendment’s history and the fight to end slavery that is at the core of the constitutional issue presented in this case.

---

<sup>1</sup> Pursuant to this Court’s Rule 37.2(a), all parties have consented to the filing of this brief. Counsel of record for all parties received notice at least 10 days prior to the due date of the Amici Curiae’s intention to file this brief. Letters evidencing such consent have been filed with the Clerk of the Court.

Pursuant to Rule 37.6, Amici Curiae affirm that no counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than Amici Curiae or their counsel made a monetary contribution to its preparation or submission.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This case concerns Congressional power to effectuate the Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery and involuntary servitude – and it cries out for this Court's review. Judge Elrod, who authored the opinion below, took the extraordinary step of specially concurring with her own opinion to state, "[W]e would benefit from additional guidance from the Supreme Court on how to harmonize these lines of precedent." The panel (wrongly in our view) considered itself to be bound by this Court's decision in Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409 (1968). But even if the panel is right, then this Court should grant the petition to overrule Jones and harmonize the Thirteenth Amendment with this Court's later case law.

Last year, the Tenth Circuit expressed similar misgivings. United States v. Hatch, 722 F.3d 1193, 1201 (10th Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1358 (2014). Judge Tymkovich, writing for the panel, stated, "[Petitioner's] arguments raise important federalism questions." But he too felt helpless to address them, stating that "in light of Jones it will be up to the Supreme Court" to consider them.

Section 1 of the Thirteenth Amendment bans slavery and involuntary servitude. Section 2 grants Congress the power to effectuate that ban. But, contrary to the Fifth Circuit's reading of Jones, while Congress is given broad prophylactic power to ensure that slavery is indeed banished, never to return, it is not given the additional independent power to uproot the badges, incidents, and relics of slavery untethered to the goal of banning slavery itself.

The ramifications of the contrary view would be extraordinary. Consider the Nineteenth (women's suffrage) and Twenty-Sixth (18-year-olds' suffrage) Amendments. Since they contain essentially identical grants of power to Congress, they would have to be interpreted to allow Congress to uproot historical relics of the failure to enfranchise those groups earlier. It is safe to say that the power to remake the country as Congress thinks it "would have been" is virtually an unlimited power.

A more reasonable interpretation of these amendments is that they ban exactly what they say they ban. In the case of the Thirteenth Amendment, that would be slavery and involuntary servitude. Congress's prophylactic power, although broad, must be focused on that end.

The Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act ("HCPA"), Pub. L. No. 111-84, 123 Stat. 2835, was passed in 2009 – 144 years after the Thirteenth Amendment's slavery ban. One section of that act, codified at 18 U.S.C. § 249(a)(1), nevertheless relies on Congress's Section 2 power as authority for the creation of criminal penalties for crimes committed "because of the actual or perceived race, color, religion, or national origin of any person." (A different section of the act, not at issue in this case, relies on Congress's Commerce Clause to prohibit crimes that occur "because of" someone's religion, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity and disability, 18 U.S.C. § 249(a)(2), and requires proof of an interstate commerce nexus.)<sup>2</sup>

Congress did not even claim that it passed Section 249(a)(1) to effectuate the Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery. Instead it stated simply that it was attempting to eliminate the "badges, incidents and relics of slavery." 123 Stat. 2386. The provision is thus unconstitutional. See McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 421 (1819) (stating that Congress is due deference on the means by which it accomplishes legitimate ends, but not the ends themselves). See infra at Part B.

Even if Congress had claimed that it had enacted Section 249(a)(1) in order to prevent slavery's return, the provision would still be unconstitutional. When Congress makes a dubious claim that it is motivated by a desire to effectuate the Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery, the proper standard to apply is the "congruence and proportionality" test of City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997). Such a standard sidesteps the need for the Court to directly address the issue of Congress's sincerity and instead applies an objective test of whether Congress’s solution fits the problem it purports to address.

---

<sup>2</sup> Note that this means Congress relied on both powers for bias crimes based on religion and national origin, but that it relied solely on its Thirteenth Amendment power for bias crimes based on race and color. The HCPA contains a severability clause. See National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2010, Pub. L. No. 111-84, div. E, § 4709, 123 Stat. 281 (2009).

Section 249(a)(1) is in no way “congruent and proportional” to the problem of slavery. No one claims that slavery could return without Section 249(a)(1). Instead, it is clear that Congress is motivated by the desire to rid the nation of bias crimes – a perfectly understandable goal, but not a federal goal. In doing so however, it imposes substantial costs on the American criminal justice system, especially in the form of double jeopardy concerns. In situations in which there is a real federal interest at stake, these costs may be tolerable – but not when no real federal interest is at issue.

Even if the “rationality standard” of Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409 (1968), and Shelby County v. Holder, 133 S. Ct. 2612 (2013), applies instead, Section 249(a)(1) would be unconstitutional. As Shelby County makes clear, such a standard requires that current burdens be justified by current needs. The threat of slavery today is a mere phantom; the threat of double prosecutions in emotionally-charged cases is all too real. See infra at Part B.

The Fifth Circuit erred in concluding that Jones is an obstacle to holding Section 249(a)(1) unconstitutional. Jones need not be overruled in order to conclude that Congress overreached in passing Section 249(a)(1). Jones was concerned with a Reconstruction Era statute, which it interpreted to ban private discrimination in the sale of real estate. Whatever that statute's correct interpretation, there is no doubt that eliminating slavery and preventing its return was the first, second, and third thing on the minds of the members of Congress who enacted it in 1866. That is in stark contrast to the HCPA more than a century later. See infra at C.

Section 249(a)(1) is unlikely to be the only statute of the near future premised on an expansive reading of Section 2. There has been a growing movement in both academia and Congress to use the Thirteenth Amendment to address a variety of social ills thought to be in some way traceable to, or aggravated by, slavery – ranging from payday lending to race-selective abortion to “hate speech.” See Gail Heriot & Alison Somin, Sleeping Giant? Section Two of the Thirteenth Amendment, Hate Crimes Legislation, and Academia's Favorite New Vehicle for the Expansion of Federal Power, 13 Engage 31 (Dec. 2012) (“Heriot-Somin”). Granting certiorari in this case obviates the need for multiple constitutional challenges in the future. An ounce of Constitutional prevention is worth a pound of cure. See infra at Part D.

REASONS FOR GRANTING WRIT

THE THIRTEENTH AMENDMENT DOES NOT AUTHORIZE CONGRESS TO PROMULGATE A GENERAL PROHIBITION ON RACE-BASED BIAS CRIMES

A. The Thirteenth Amendment Was Intended to Ban Slavery and Gives Congress Discretion in its Efforts to Effectuate that Ban; It Was Not Intended as a Broad Grant of Power to Remedy All Social Ills Thought to be Traceable to, or Aggravated By, Slavery. Since Congress Does Not Purport to Be Motivated by a Desire to Prevent Slavery's Return, Section 249(a)(1) Is Unconstitutional.

Section 1's straightforward text mostly speaks for itself. Modern scholars have sometimes quoted lofty rhetoric by contemporary orators about its purpose and likely consequences,<sup>3</sup> but in the end its legal significance is unusually clear for a Constitutional provision: It bans slavery and involuntary servitude. Its “undoubtedly self-executing” character limits the extent to which it can or should be broadly or metaphorically construed. See Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, 20 (1883).

---

<sup>3</sup> Jennifer Mason McAward, Congressional Authority to Interpret the Thirteenth Amendment: A Response to Professor Tsesis, 71 Md. L. Rev. 60, 64-8 (2011) (responding to Tsesis's argument in the same volume in the service of supporting broad readings of Section 2). For a more complete exposition of the Congressional debates and subsequent Thirteenth Amendment case law, see Jennifer Mason McAward, The Scope of Congress's Thirteenth Amendment Enforcement Power after City of Boerne v. Flores, 88 Wash. U.L. Rev. 77 (2010) ("McAward on Enforcement Power"); Jennifer Mason McAward, Defining the Badges and Incidents of Slavery, 14 U. Pa. J. Const. L. 561 (2012) ("McAward on Badges and Incidents").

As for Section 2, there was relatively little discussion regarding its interpretation in the congressional debates. Amendment co-author Senator Lyman Trumbull and supporter Representative Chilton White both said that Congress’s enforcement powers resembled those under the Necessary and Proper Clause.<sup>4</sup> Following McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 421 (1819), their comments suggest that they agreed with Chief Justice Marshall’s celebrated explication of that clause:

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of that constitution, are constitutional.

Put only slightly differently, Trumbull and White’s comments suggest that courts should review deferentially the means Congress chooses to achieve a particular end, but they should not show such deference regarding the legitimacy of the ends of such legislation.<sup>5</sup> Under that view, Section 2 legislation may be prophylactic in nature, but it must have as its end the effectuation of Section 1 and not some other goal.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup> Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 53, 1313 (1864) (Sen. Trumbull); Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 2d Sess. 214 (1865) (Rep. White).

The first Supreme Court cases interpreting Section 2 declined to read it expansively. United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 329 (1883), concerned a provision of the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871, 17 Stat. 13 (1871), which stated in part:

If two or more persons . . . conspire to go in disguise upon the highway . . . for the purpose of depriving . . . any person . . . of the equal protection of the laws . . . each of said persons shall be punished by a fine . . . or by imprisonment. . . .

The Court held that this was an impermissible exercise of Congress's Section 2 power because it covered conspiracies by white persons against a white person or by black persons against a black person who had never been enslaved.

---

<sup>5</sup> See McAward on Enforcement Power.

<sup>6</sup> More expansive views of Section 2's potential could be found in speeches made by the Amendment's opponents. But these speakers were not arguing that an expansive view was desirable, but that the amendment should be rejected. See McAward on Enforcement Power, supra n. 3, at 106-8. See also George Rutherglen, The Badges and Incidents of Slavery and the Power of Congress to Enforce the Thirteenth Amendment, in Alexander Tsesis, The Promises of Liberty: The History and Contemporary Relevance of the Thirteenth Amendment (2010) ("Rutherglen").

Ten months later, in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3 (1883), the Court again held a federal statute to be an improper exercise of Congress’s Section 2 power – this time the Civil Rights Act of 1875, 18 Stat. 335 (1875), which had guaranteed “the full and equal enjoyment” of public accommodations. The Civil Rights Cases firmly established that unlike the Fourteenth Amendment, which governs only state action, the Thirteenth governs private conduct and thus permits Congress to regulate such conduct directly. Id. at 11. The Court nevertheless held that Section 2 did not permit Congress to prohibit race discrimination in public accommodations. While Congress had the power to “pass all laws necessary and proper for abolishing all badges and incidents of slavery,” being refused service by a railroad or hotel on account of one’s race was not such a badge or incident. Id. at 20.

The phrase “badges and incidents of slavery” has endured in Thirteenth Amendment case law into modern times and thus demands this Court’s attention. It was in widespread use before the Civil War. The “incidents” half of the phrase had a more determinate legal meaning. The 1857 edition of Bouvier’s Law Dictionary defined an “incident” as a “thing depending upon, appertaining to, or following another, called the principal.”<sup>7</sup> According to Professor Jennifer Mason McAward, a leading Thirteenth

---

<sup>7</sup> Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 617 (7th ed. 1857), cited in McAward on Badges and Incidents, supra n. 3, at 570.

Amendment scholar, an “incident” of slavery was “an aspect of the law that was inherently tied to or that flowed directly from the institution of slavery – a legal restriction that applied to slaves qua slaves or a legal right that inhered in slave owners qua slave owners.”<sup>8</sup> The clearest incident of slavery is compulsory service – since it is both necessary and arguably sufficient to create the slave-owner relationship. But the inability to acquire property and the inability to sue in court could also arguably be described as incidents of slavery as practiced in the antebellum South.<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> McAward on Badges and Incidents, supra n. 3, at 572. McAward gives additional examples of the ways in which antebellum and Civil War Era courts and other legal actors used “incident” in this legal sense. See also McAward on Enforcement Power, supra n. 3, at 126; Rutherglen, supra n. 6, at 164-5.

<sup>9</sup> Trumbull’s comments that the Amendment’s effect was only to “rid the country of slavery” suggested that his conception of the Amendment’s reach was narrow. Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 1314 (1864). Similarly, Senator John Brooks Henderson, another of the Amendment’s co-authors, argued that it conferred or could confer only freedom upon the freed slave. See Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 1465 (1864). According to Senator James Harlan, however, it conferred rights such as “the right to acquir[e] and hol[d] property,” the deprivation of which was a “necessary incident” to slavery. Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 1439-40 (1864). This issue became highly significant in the debates over the Civil Rights Act of 1866, 14 Stat. 27 (1866), which purported to confer those rights on all citizens regardless of race (and not simply regardless of former slave status) under the authority of the Thirteenth Amendment. See McAward on Enforcement Power, supra n. 3, at 109-114.

(Continued on following page)

“Badges,” by contrast, was a more open-ended term that did not have a precise legal meaning but that was nonetheless used widely in antebellum abolitionist popular writing. Mid-nineteenth-century dictionary definitions are not terribly different from modern ones; one dictionary defines “badge” as a “mark or sign worn by some persons, or placed upon certain things for the purpose of designation.”<sup>10</sup> Some badges of slavery were literal. In antebellum Charleston, South Carolina, the city issued copper badges to all slaves-for-hire identifying the particular slave’s

---

President Andrew Johnson vetoed that legislation in part on the ground that the Thirteenth Amendment abolished slavery and did not authorize Congress to require states to confer upon freedmen or upon African-Americans the legal capacity to buy, sell, or own property and that this was therefore a matter for the States. See Veto Message from President Andrew Johnson to Congress (Mar. 27, 1866), re-printed in Lillian Foster, Andrew Johnson: His Life and Speeches (1866). Congress overrode his veto. To be sure of its authority, however, Congress re-enacted those provisions after the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, which, among other things, requires states to accord all persons the equal protection of the laws, in the Civil Rights Act of 1870, 16 Stat. 140 (1870).

This shows what was then considered to be a close Thirteenth Amendment question. There is no doubt that the legal incapacity to purchase, own, and convey property was an important (and according to some necessary) legal incident of a slave’s status and that slavery was still in the process of being dismantled at the time. Yet it was controversial whether Congress had the power under Section 2 to confer the right to that legal capacity.

<sup>10</sup> Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 151 (7th ed. 1857), cited in McAward on Badges and Incidents, supra n. 3, at 575.

trade (e.g. mechanic) and official number. See Harlan Greene et al., Slave Badges and the Slave-Hire System in Charleston, South Carolina 1783-1865 (2008). A legal requirement that slaves-for-hire be licensed was certainly an “incident of slavery-for-hire”; the badges were the clearest case of a “badge of slavery.” But the term “badge of slavery” was also used metaphorically at the time. “Badge of slavery” was sometimes used, for example, to refer to black skin.<sup>11</sup> It is fair to say, however, that “badge” was ordinarily used to describe a characteristic that was distinctively associated with slave status and not one that could be commonly associated with both slave and non-slave status.

After the Civil War, however, the distinction between badges and incidents appears to have been lost. The phrase “badge of slavery” was used only twice during the debates over the Civil Rights Act of 1866, 14 Stat. 27 (1866). There, Senator Trumbull appears to use it as a synonym for “incidents,” as did this Court in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. at 20.

Congress’s Section 2 power fell out of use following the Civil Rights Cases – likely because Congress thought that it had already erected the statutory framework needed to fulfill Section 1’s promise. For about a century, most Thirteenth Amendment action involved the enforcement of the Peonage Abolition Act, 14 Stat. 546 (1867), which stated:

---

<sup>11</sup> McAward on Badges and Incidents, supra at n. 3, at 576-8.

The holding of any person to service or labor under the system known as peonage is abolished and forever prohibited . . . and all acts, laws, resolutions, orders, regulations or usages . . . of any territory or state, . . . by virtue of which any attempt shall hereafter be made to establish, maintain, or enforce, directly or indirectly, the voluntary or involuntary service or labor of any person . . . in liquidation of any debt . . . are declared null and void.

Between the turn of the century and 1945, the federal government prosecuted over 100 peonage cases. In the years since emancipation, sharecroppers and agricultural laborers had come to be ensnared in a cycle of debt that sometimes obliged them to remain on the plantations. A complex web of laws – criminal laws for breach of contract and for vagrancy, etc. – supported a system that roughly approximated many of the attributes of antebellum slavery. See Benno Schmidt, Jr., Peonage in The Oxford Companion to the Supreme Court of the United States 729 (Kermit Hall, et al., eds., 2005). In order to abolish peonage, these laws had to be dismantled one by one – a task that involved multiple trips to this Court by both the United States and civil plaintiffs. See Pollock v. Williams, 322 U.S. 4 (1944) (and cases cited therein). It is fair to call such laws “incidents of the on-going practice of peonage.” Removing them was not just removing the legal incidents of peonage for their own sake; it was dismantling peonage itself. As far as Congress and the courts were concerned, these legal incidents of peonage were peonage, and peonage was slavery.

The notable thing about the first century of the Thirteenth Amendment's history is that this Court never suggested that Section 2 authorized Congress to do anything other than effectuate Section 1's prohibition on slavery. When courts used the term "badges and incidents," it was in the context of dismantling actual slavery. By attacking the "badges and incidents" of slavery, they were attacking the institution of slavery itself – one by one removing its legal supports till the institutional edifice came crashing to the ground.

This is not to say that Congress's authority under Section 2 does not permit it to attack the legal supports of slavery unless these supports have no other significance. The legal supports for peonage, which included laws with harsh penalties for vagrancy, had application outside the context of peonage too. But if Congress wants to employ its Section 2 power to prohibit vagrancy laws of that type, its purpose must be to effectuate the ban on slavery and not some other goal. If Congress responds to a phantom problem, the lack of a true Thirteenth Amendment purpose is obvious.

In this case, Congress does not even purport to be motivated by the desire to prevent slavery's return. Instead it treats eliminating slavery's badges, incidents, and relics as an end unto itself. The Findings section of the HCPA states in relevant part that “eliminating racially motivated violence is an important means of eliminating, to the extent possible, the badges, incidents, and relics of slavery and involuntary servitude” and “in order to eliminate, to the extent possible, the badges, incidents, and relics of slavery, it is necessary to prohibit assaults on the basis of real or perceived religions or national origins.” 123 Stat. 2386. Nowhere does it state that eliminating these things will have any value in reinforcing the ban on slavery itself. The law cannot therefore be justified by the Thirteenth Amendment.

B. Even if Congress Had Purported to Be Motivated By a Desire to Prevent Slavery’s Return, Section 249(a)(1) Is Neither Congruent and Proportional Nor Rationally Related to that Aim.

If Congress had claimed to be motivated by a desire to prevent slavery’s return, Section 249(a)(1) would still be unconstitutional. Indeed, under any test that the Court has devised for statutes that purport to be promulgated pursuant to Reconstruction amendments, that section fails.

Amici believe that the congruence and proportionality test of City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997), is the correct test. It should be used where Congress asserts that its “ends” are those laid out in the Reconstruction amendments, but where that assertion is open to doubt. Rather than requiring courts to examine Congress's sincerity directly, the congruence and proportionality test offers an objective basis for determining a statute's constitutionality. If Congress's enactment is congruent and proportional to an end laid out in the Reconstruction Amendments, then courts should presume that end is in fact Congress's end.

Section 249(a)(1) fails under the congruence and proportionality standard. Slavery is dead. The threat of its return is so remote as to be practically non-existent. Legislation cannot be congruent and proportional to a non-existent threat. Only a naïf would believe Section 249(a)(1) is intended to prevent slavery's return. The deviation from our usual norm against double jeopardy that the HCPA inevitably creates cannot be justified by a non-existent federal interest.

What is clear is that Congress was motivated not by a desire to keep slavery at bay, but by a desire to prevent bias crimes, regardless of their connection to interstate commerce, as an end unto itself (although another goal may have been to appease activists who advocate federal penalties for bias crimes).<sup>12</sup> However desirable Congress's goal may be in the abstract, it is not a constitutionally authorized use of federal authority.<sup>13</sup>

---

<sup>12</sup> See Thousands Protest Hate Crimes, CNN Newsroom, Nov. 16, 2007 (stating that “[t]housands . . . converg[ed] on the U.S. Justice Department” on November 16, 2007, “demanding more federal prosecutions of hate crimes”).

The “rationality” test should be used when, unlike this case, it is clear that Congress’s end falls within those laid out in the Reconstruction Amendments and only its “means” are at issue. This is consistent with McCulloch’s required deference to Congress’s means.

But even under the rationality test Section 249(a)(1) cannot survive. This Court’s recent decision in Shelby County v. Holder, 133 S. Ct. 2612 (2013), demonstrated that, contrary to many commentators’ understanding, the rationality test of South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301 (1966), and Jones is not utterly toothless. In Shelby County, this Court held that the portion of the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Re-Authorization Act (“VRARA”), 120 Stat. 577 (2006), that re-authorized the Voting Rights Act of 1965’s pre-clearance provisions was not a valid exercise of Congress’s Fifteenth Amendment authority. By 2006, the danger of disfranchisement in covered jurisdictions, which had been great in 1965, was too remote to justify pre-clearance’s burdens.

The Court reasoned that VRARA “imposes current burdens and must be justified by current needs.”

---

<sup>13</sup> Given that the HCPA’s double jeopardy aspects are not a bug but a central feature of the law, it raises concerns even apart from the Thirteenth Amendment issue.

If current burdens must be justified by current needs, then the test has its own implicit proportionality requirement. An enactment is not rational unless the burdens it imposes are at least arguably proportional to its benefits.

The burdens imposed by Section 249(a)(1) are even greater and the needs more remote. On one hand, the danger of slavery's return is an ugly chimera; Congress did not even claim such a motivation. On the other, the HCPA is in tension with some of the most sacred principles of the American criminal justice system – especially the ban on double jeopardy. Indeed, in United States v. Hatch, 722 F.3d 1193 (10th Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1358 (2014), petitioner's state proceeding was still in progress when he was indicted in federal court. In a federal system, the principle that no individual should have to answer twice for the same conduct must be weighed against the principle that both federal and state authorities must have the opportunity to vindicate their interests. The “dual sovereignty rule” is an unavoidable compromise of these conflicting principles. See United States v. Lanza, 260 U.S. 377 (1922). But it depends for its legitimacy on this Court's willingness to enforce the Constitution's framework of limited, enumerated Congressional powers. Congress cannot promulgate laws that have nothing to do with slavery and then recite a concern for slavery as their justification, thereby avoiding double jeopardy concerns.

Just as Congress would have been justified in subjecting the covered jurisdictions to the pain of pre-clearance if there were a real threat of African-American disfranchisement, it may have been justified in subjecting alleged perpetrators of bias crimes to double jeopardy if there were a real threat of slavery's return. But there is not.

C. Contrary to the Fifth Circuit's Decision in this Case, Jones Does Not Authorize Congress to Promulgate Section 249(a)(1).

This case would not be before this Court today but for Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409 (1968). Without Jones, it is unlikely that Congress would have regarded its Section 2 power as expansively as it did in passing Section 249(a)(1). Moreover, without Jones, the Fifth Circuit would not have considered itself constrained to find Section 249(a)(1) constitutional. Slip Op. at 6. In fact, however, Jones is distinguishable from the case at bar and should in no way be read to authorize Section 249(a)(1).<sup>14</sup>

---

<sup>14</sup> Only if this Court decides that the Thirteenth Amendment permits Congress to outlaw the badges or incidents of slavery independently from any purpose to outlaw slavery itself would the Court need to address Jones's continued viability. Jones held that it is up to Congress to define "badges and incidents" (though it never says they can be outlawed independently of a purpose to outlaw slavery itself), while City of Boerne holds that it is the Court's job to define violations of the Fourteenth Amendment, hence putting Jones's continued viability on that point in doubt. Unless the Court is required to
(Continued on following page)

Jones concerned a suburban St. Louis real estate developer's policy of not selling homes to African Americans. Joseph & Barbara Jo Jones, an interracial couple, brought suit. The Fair Housing Act was not passed until the week after their case had been argued in this Court. Instead, they brought suit under a then-obscure section of the Civil Rights Act of 1866, 14 Stat. 27 (1866). It read:

All citizens of the United States shall have the same right . . . as is enjoyed by white citizens . . . to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real . . . property.

Much of Jones dealt with a question of statutory interpretation – whether these words amounted to a ban on race discrimination by private sellers in real estate transactions. The Court held that they did.<sup>15</sup> rubber-stamp Congress's definitions of "badges" or "incidents," being victimized by a bias crime, even a race-based bias crime, is clearly neither. It is not a legal right accorded to slave owners or legal disability imposed on slaves. It is not even one step removed from an incident of slavery in that it is not a legal right or disability imposed on former slaves or slave owners. It is also not a badge of slavery, given that it is hardly a characteristic indicative of slave status. No one is immune from such crimes. See James B. Jacobs & Kimberly Potter, Hate Crimes: Criminal Law & Identity Politics 143 (1998). They happen everywhere, not just in the states of the Old Confederacy. See, e.g., Guy Raz & Sylvia Poggoli, Spate of Hate Crimes in Italy Sets Off Alarm Bells, NPR News, May 31, 2008.

---

<sup>15</sup> Amici submit that Jones's statutory interpretation aspects were not just wrong, but astonishingly wrong. The statute was about the legal capacity to inherit, purchase, etc., not about private discrimination. See, e.g., Gerhard Casper,

(Continued on following page)

It further held that Section 2 of the Thirteenth Amendment authorized such a law. In analyzing this latter question, the Court again used the “badges and incidents” terminology to describe appropriate targets of Congress’s power under Section 2. But the Court was more explicitly deferential than in the Civil Rights Cases, holding that Congress’s determination that particular conduct is a badge or incident of slavery is subject only to rational basis review. It held Congress to be rational in viewing race discrimination by private sellers to be a badge or incident of slavery. Id. at 439-40.

Jones did not, however, purport to overrule McCulloch. Indeed, it cited it prominently. Jones at 443. The requirement that the means must be “plainly adapted” to the only constitutional end authorized by the Thirteenth Amendment – effectuating the ban on slavery – appears intact.

Jones construed a statute passed in 1866, a time when the nation was still dismantling the actual institution of slavery, not in sorting out its vestiges and relics. Under the circumstances, giving Congress discretion in identifying the badges and incidents of slavery is best viewed as deferring to Congress on the means of exterminating slavery, not as allowing Congress to define its legitimate ends. Section

---

Jones v. Mayer: Clio, Bemused and Confused Muse, 1968 Sup. Ct. Rev. 89 (1968). But there is no need to revisit that issue now, and there may never be.

249(a)(1) would not be due the same deference, since dismantling slavery itself is no longer the aim.

In dictum, Jones refers not just to “badges and incidents,” but also “vestiges” and “relics” of slavery. Congress picked up on this language in its HCPA Findings, which call for eliminating the “relics of slavery.” Jones’s use of this language reinforces our point that it was about an 1866 statute about which there was no doubt of Congress’s legitimate goal of dismantling slavery. If Congress has the power to uproot whatever it rationally regards as relics and vestiges of slavery and the relics and vestiges of racial disfranchisement (Fifteenth Amendment), female disfranchisement (Nineteenth Amendment), poll taxes (Twenty-Fourth Amendment), and disfranchisement of 18-year-olds (Twenty-Sixth Amendment), then it has virtually unlimited power.<sup>16</sup>

D. The Authors of the Fifth Circuit and the Tenth Circuit Decisions on Section 249(a)(1) Both Conceded that Important Federalism Questions Are Raised by that Section, But They (Erroneously) Concluded that Jones Required Them to Leave those Questions to this Court.

The Fifth Circuit found that it was bound by its reading of Jones, but Judge Elrod’s extraordinary special concurrence to her own opinion for the panel falls just short of pleading with this Court to grant the Petition: “[W]e would benefit from additional guidance from the Supreme Court on how to harmonize these lines of precedent.”

---

<sup>16</sup> All of these amendments have Congressional enforcement clauses virtually identical to the Thirteenth Amendment’s.

The Tenth Circuit also conceded that “[petitioner’s] arguments raise important federalism questions.” But it was reluctant to act on those arguments, stating that “in light of Jones it will be up to the Supreme Court to choose whether to extend its more recent federalism cases to the Thirteenth Amendment.” Hatch Slip Op. at 17. (To be fair, the Tenth Circuit’s decision came down only days after Shelby County and it does not appear to have had the opportunity to consider the striking parallels between that case’s treatment of statutes passed long after the crisis is over and the situation here.)

As discussed in Part C, the notion that Jones required those courts to uphold Section 249(a)(1) was error, since Jones is distinguishable from this case. But if Jones needs to be overruled to restore the principles of limited government and federalism to Thirteenth Amendment jurisprudence, then so be it.

This Court should grant certiorari so as to overturn this erroneous decision and to prevent other courts as well as Congress from accepting its flawed reasoning. See Heriot-Somin at 35-36 (cataloguing numerous proposals for future legislation based on an unreasonably broad reading of the Thirteenth Amendment).

---

◆

CONCLUSION

The conduct Petitioners were found to engage in was reprehensible. Amici note only that advocates for the Constitution's framework of limited government do not always get to choose their allies. Congress does not have the authority to base Section 249(a)(1) on the Thirteenth Amendment. Punishment for conduct like theirs should therefore be based on state criminal laws or federal criminal laws passed pursuant to Congress's other enumerated powers. Congress can reformulate the HCPA if it so chooses.

DATED: August 19, 2014.

Respectfully submitted,

ALISON SCHMAUCH SOMIN

Counsel of Record

19 N. Garfield St.

Arlington, VA 22201

(202) 557-0202

alison.somin@gmail.com

GAIL L. HERIOT

4830 Hart Drive

San Diego, CA 92116

Counsel for Amici Curiae
Gail Heriot & Peter Kirsanow